Engaging Pre-School Kids with Books

$35.00

Wednesday, August 15, 6:30—8:00 p.m.

Explanation, demonstration and practice of Dialogic reading techniques developed from the Stoney Brook Reading and Language Project (Grover Whitehurst 1992). Participants will explore the “how to” of transforming the child’s traditional role from that of passive listener to active storyteller. These various techniques of prompting, evaluating, expanding and recall can be used with young children ages 2 1/2 – kindergarten to learn more from books; improving vocabulary, word recognition and overall comprehension. This workshop brings to life how learning takes place within the relationship between the reader and the learner as they share conversation and the love of books to build oral language and ultimately becoming proficient readers. Dialogic reading is perfect for parents or teachers of young children to enhance their precious time together while strengthening literacy skills for school readiness and a smart future.

This mindfulness training is an exploration of how we communicate with others. Through the practices of mindful speaking and listening we learn to be present in the moment, and learn skills to be effective communicators. Mindful communication consists of mindful listening and speaking. Mindful listening helps to provide insights and understanding to the speaker, allowing the speaker to truly feel heard. Mindful speaking helps us come from a place of authenticity, where we are not talking from autopilot but truly present to the moment and the situation. Both involve awareness and create connection.

This process of mindful communication can have a profound impact on the way we communicate. This training helps build skills for effective communication building trust between the speaker and the listener, allowing relationships to flourish.

#P19-28

$35.00

Wednesday, December 8, 9:00 a.m.—12:00 p.m.

Room: TBD

Instructor: Christine Cerbana

Why do feelings matter? Why should we be concerned with developing emotional literacy in children? A child's awareness around feelings does not come naturally. Being able to recognize, express, and manage a range of emotions benefits a child's mental health and well-being. And being able to emotionally regulate emotions has a role in developing the necessary cognitive skills for success in school. So how do we teach kids about feelings? This workshop will define emotional literacy, social-emotional learning, emotional intelligence, and empathy while making the case for emotional development in children and providing practical tips and strategies for parents and caregivers. Let's give them the gift of identifying and coping with their whirlwind of BIG EMOTIONS and lifelong emotional health!
