

RRCC Students,

I can't thank you enough for your understanding and patience during this very difficult and confusing time. I appreciate and respect your continued dedication to your coursework and for your remarkable willingness to adapt to many changes so quickly. Know that I will continue to let you know what is happening as often as possible. I want to take a moment to let each of you know about a very important decision that has been made, out of concern for your health and safety. As the COVID-19 virus continues to cause considerable changes to our daily lives, not just in our community but globally, your well-being is of the utmost importance and is always our top priority. On that note, classes will continue to be instructed remotely through the end of our current semester. As much as I already miss seeing you on campus, it is in everyone's best interest that we continue to offer instruction for you online. Please be assured the quality of instruction will continue to meet our standards of excellence, as our wonderful instructors are committed to meeting the needs of their students during this time. In the next couple of days, expect to hear from me again with some specific information related to graduation. If you are in need of student resources or services remotely, information is available here. I hope that you are all well, healthy, and safe.

Michele
